

50 First Ladies of the USA

Notebooking Pages

The image displays a collection of educational materials for learning about US First Ladies. It features two primary notebooking pages:

- Grace Anna Goodhue Coolidge 30: This page includes a map of the United States to identify her home state, and fields for: "When was she born? Where was she born?", "When did she die? Where is she buried?", "President/Husband:", "Children:", "Years she served as First Lady: Other service to her country:", "Interesting facts about her:", "One thing I admire about her:", and "Is there a museum, house, or presidential library about her? Where is it?"
- Barbara Pierce Bush 41: This page follows a similar format, including a home state map and fields for: "When did she die? Where is she buried?", "Years she served as First Lady: Other service to her country:", and "One thing I admire about her:".

Accompanying the pages are several portraits of First Ladies, including a modern photograph of Michelle Obama, a photograph of Melania Trump, and several historical oil paintings of First Ladies in 19th-century attire.

Learn About the First Ladies

American Presidents are an incredible group of men from differing backgrounds and a variety of political views. Their wives are just as impressive.

Some, like Martha Washington, overcame shyness to be at her husband's side through war and the turmoil of a brand new nation. Others, like Nancy Reagan, took a strong stand against evil in the nation. Nancy took her stand against drugs. Some First Ladies earned nicknames because of personal conviction—that's what happened to "Lemonade Lucy." First Lady Jacqueline Kennedy redecorated the White House and First Lady Abigail Adams saved historical artwork when the White House caught on fire.

The First Lady is the Hostess of the White House. Most often this is the wife of the President, but sometimes, if the President is a widower or single, a sister, daughter, or daughter-in-law fills in and is given the title First Lady. Sometimes a President lost their wife and remarried while still President. That's why there are more First Ladies than Presidents.

Lady Bird Johnson, Jimmy & Roselyn Carter, Gerald & Betty Ford, Richard & Pat Nixon, Ronald & Nancy Reagan, George & Barbara Bush

In your research, you can discover these amazing First Ladies who were smart, beautiful, articulate, and, above all, committed to supporting their husbands in the difficult role of leading the greatest nation on earth.

You will be impressed, amazed, saddened, and bewildered as you learn more about the lives of these amazing women.

It's so fun to research and record what you learn!

Today, we will be researching the USA's first 45 First Ladies. On each page, you will find her name, her husband's presidential number, and photo. In addition, there are questions about her that you can read books and investigate online to find the answers.

Enjoy!
